

Christmas Gift Exchange Left Right Game

It was Christmas Eve at the Wright house, and everything had to be just right. Mrs. Wright made sure the stockings were hung just right on the mantel, while Mr. Wright made one last trip to the store because he had left the wrapping paper in the shopping cart.

The trip to the store took a little longer because Mr. Wright took a right out of the neighborhood, then another right to get to the store parking lot, but he should have taken a left to get in the parking lot.

Their children, Emma and Jack Wright, were excited to open presents, but first, they wanted to play a Christmas game. "Alright," said Mrs. Wright, "everyone needs to sit down and hold a gift tight. When you hear the words left or right, pass your gift that way."

Just then, the doorbell rang. Grandma Wright had arrived! She had left her hat in the car, but in her right hand she had a tote bag with a plate of cookies and a container of fudge to share. She set them down on the table to the right of the tree.

Mr. Wright returned and told the family how it had taken him longer to get to the store because he took a right out of the neighborhood, then a right into the wrong parking lot.

The family gathered together. Mr. Wright read the Christmas story, holding the Bible with his right and left hands. He told about Mary and Joseph traveling a long way before they found the right place in Bethlehem. They left their home behind, but they trusted that everything would turn out right.

Christmas Gift Exchange

Left Right Story

It was Christmas Eve at the Wright house, and everything had to be just right. Mrs. Wright made sure the stockings were hung just right on the mantel, while Mr. Wright made one last trip to the store because he had left the wrapping paper in the shopping cart.

The trip to the store took a little longer because Mr. Wright took a right out of the neighborhood, then another right to get to the store parking lot, but he should have taken a left to get in the parking lot.

Their children, Emma and Jack Wright, were excited to open presents, but first, they wanted to play a Christmas game. "Alright," said Mrs. Wright, "everyone needs to sit down and hold a gift tight. When you hear the words left or right, pass your gift that way."

Just then, the doorbell rang. Grandma Wright had arrived! She had left her hat in the car, but in her right hand she had a tote bag with a plate of cookies and a container of fudge to share. She set them down on the table to the right of the tree.

Mr. Wright returned and told the family how it had taken him longer to get to the store because he took a right out of the neighborhood, then a right into the wrong parking lot.

The family gathered together. Mr. Wright read the Christmas story, holding the Bible with his right and left hands. He told about Mary and Joseph traveling a long way before they found the right place in Bethlehem. They left their home behind, but they trusted that everything would turn out right.

Christmas Gift Exchange Left Right Story

It was Christmas Eve at the Wright house, and everything had to be just right. Mrs. Wright made sure the stockings were hung just right on the mantel, while Mr. Wright made one last trip to the store because he had left the wrapping paper in the shopping cart.

The trip to the store took a little longer because Mr. Wright took a right out of the neighborhood, then another right to get to the store parking lot, but he should have taken a left to get in the parking lot.

Their children, Emma and Jack Wright, were excited to open presents, but first, they wanted to play a Christmas game. “Alright,” said Mrs. Wright, “everyone needs to sit down and hold a gift tight. When you hear the words left or right, pass your gift that way.”

Just then, the doorbell rang. Grandma Wright had arrived! She had left her hat in the car, but in her right hand she had a tote bag with a plate of cookies and a container of fudge to share. She set them down on the table to the right of the tree.

Mr. Wright returned and told the family how it had taken him longer to get to the store because he took a right out of the neighborhood, then a right into the wrong parking lot.

The family gathered together. Mr. Wright read the Christmas story, holding the Bible with his right and left hands. He told about Mary and Joseph traveling a long way before they found the right place in Bethlehem. They left their home behind, but they trusted that everything would turn out right.

Christmas Gift Exchange

Left Right Story

It was Christmas Eve at the Wright house, and everything had to be just right. Mrs. Wright made sure the stockings were hung just right on the mantel, while Mr. Wright made one last trip to the store because he had left the wrapping paper in the shopping cart.

The trip to the store took a little longer because Mr. Wright took a right out of the neighborhood, then another right to get to the store parking lot, but he should have taken a left to get in the parking lot.

Their children, Emma and Jack Wright, were excited to open presents, but first, they wanted to play a Christmas game. "Alright," said Mrs. Wright, "everyone needs to sit down and hold a gift tight. When you hear the words left or right, pass your gift that way."

Just then, the doorbell rang. Grandma Wright had arrived! She had left her hat in the car, but in her right hand she had a tote bag with a plate of cookies and a container of fudge to share. She set them down on the table to the right of the tree.

Mr. Wright returned and told the family how it had taken him longer to get to the store because he took a right out of the neighborhood, then a right into the wrong parking lot.

The family gathered together. Mr. Wright read the Christmas story, holding the Bible with his right and left hands. He told about Mary and Joseph traveling a long way before they found the right place in Bethlehem. They left their home behind, but they trusted that everything would turn out right.

CHRISTMAS GIFT EXCHANGE

It was Christmas Eve at the Wright house, and everything had to be just right. Mrs. Wright made sure the stockings were hung just right on the mantel, while Mr. Wright made one last trip to the store because he had left the wrapping paper in the shopping cart.

The trip to the store took a little longer because Mr. Wright took a right out of the neighborhood, then another right to get to the store parking lot, but he should have taken a left to get in the parking lot.

Their children, Emma and Jack Wright, were excited to open presents, but first, they wanted to play a Christmas game. "Alright," said Mrs. Wright, "everyone needs to sit down and hold a gift tight. When you hear the words left or right, pass your gift that way."

Just then, the doorbell rang. Grandma Wright had arrived! She had left her hat in the car, but in her right hand she had a tote bag with a plate of cookies and a container of fudge to share. She set them down on the table to the right of the tree.

Mr. Wright returned and told the family how it had taken him longer to get to the store because he took a right out of the neighborhood, then a right into the wrong parking lot.

The family gathered together. Mr. Wright read the Christmas story, holding the Bible with his right and left hands. He told about Mary and Joseph traveling a long way before they found the right place in Bethlehem. They left their home behind, but they trusted that everything would turn out right.

